

In addition to teaching art at LHS, I try to keep my fingers involved in outside art projects. The latest of which was a large set of clay murals for Sanford Heart Hospital in Sioux Falls, South Dakota.

I'm honored that my good friend, Brad Bachmeier continues to receive commissions for large scale mural projects and continues to hire me to help with the sculpting.

Our previous collaboration was a monumental brick mural that now resides in the Camp Grafton Army training base at Devil's lake, ND. It's always fun working with Brad on these projects and I consider it an honor to be a part of such prestigious commissions.

Those of you who have known me since 1993 have known of my "epic" frugality and have also known the epitome of frugality, my white Geo Metro. Until last month it was a very pristine little car. That changed when a "blind" deer bounced off the side of my car, causing some nasty body damage. I pounded out the front fender so it's shaped roughly back to the way it was but the door and rear panel are waiting for me to come back to that project with a "fresh eye" if you know what I mean.

As always, check the Blog page to keep up with the latest projects and rants that I care to share with the world.

Again, Merry Christmas to all of you and be sure keep in touch in 2012!
